Amity's humanitarian relief: progressing all the way

Ling Chunxiang

General Secretary
The Amity Foundation

The Humanitarian Charter and Minimum Standards in Humanitarian Response has two core beliefs: "People affected by disaster or conflict have the right to life with dignity and the right to assistance" and "all possible steps should be taken to alleviate human suffering arising out of disaster or conflict". The Core Humanitarian Standard on Quality and Accountability (CHS) sets out nine commitments for humanitarian and development practitioners, including "humanitarian response is appropriate and relevant", "humanitarian response is effective and timely", and "staff are supported to do their job effectively and are treated fairly and equitably". These standards and commitments provide reference on project content and quality control for the Amity Foundation and other social forces to participate in humanitarian relief.

The Amity Foundation is one of the first social organizations in China that carry out domestic and international humanitarian relief. Since 1987, Amity has constantly responded to natural disasters in more than 20 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions across China. Since 2009, Amity has extended its humanitarian presence to more countries around the world. The Amity Foundation has strictly followed humanitarian rescue principles, operational guidelines, laws and policies at home and abroad, and provided emergency relief, post-disaster reconstruction and development services to disaster-stricken people.

Three key principles summarize Amity's disaster management practice:

On-demand: Amity believes that natural environment, economy, society, lifestyle and other factors have impacts on humanitarian relief operations. Therefore it is difficult to provide aid while focusing on a specific factor. We believe sufficient and scientific assessment of needs can help to find an entry point for any response and to avoid ineffective and repeated operations. For example, in July 2020, Amity included fresh foods for the first time in the supplies provided to flood-stricken villages in Jiangxi. In May 2021, Amity provided 126 mobile toilets to the communities affected by the Yangbi earthquake in Dali, Yunnan. The innovative attempts and choices made by Amity after a detailed need assessment were welcomed by the target group.

Timely: "Timeliness leads to effectiveness". In Amity's opinion, accurate information, supporting funds, complete resource channels and appropriate manpower are four conditions for "timely action". Therefore, to improve efficiency in the event of a disaster, Amity focuses on division of work and details when collecting information, carrying out fundraising, processing cooperation, and making preparation at the same time. Increased cross-sector cooperation in our projects in recent years has improved the timeliness of our humanitarian relief operations. Funds can be raised through collaboration with internet fundraising platforms, companies, volunteering groups and social organizations, while local social organizations can provide actual and real-time information, carrying out procurement, transportation, distribution and even some rescue and relief. In this manner, each participating party is able to utilize their strengths, forming an efficient ecosystem of action that minimizes loss and saves time.

Professional: In our experience, unprofessional humanitarian relief operations cannot bring effective assistance to the target communities, and may even bring harmful side effects or counter-effects. Amity attaches great importance to the learning and improvement of professional humanitarian rescue concepts and working methods. Amity classifies its emergency response mechanism into three levels according to national emergency response classification. When facing different response levels, we adopt different response strategies, participants and work division in a timely manner. Amity also participates in many domestic and international exchanges and cooperation on humanitarian relief, to improve our professionalism. For example, in May 2020, Amity joined International Council of Voluntary Agencies (ICVA), a global and professional humanitarian voluntary agency cooperation platform, as the first Chinese member in its history. ICVA has more than 130 members around the world and has extensive presence and influence. In May 2021, on behalf of Amity, I ran for the Board of Directors and became the first director representing a Chinese organization. I believe that on this platform, Amity will gain more professional experience, scientific knowledge, and updates on the latest good practices on humanitarian relief to improve our operational expertise.

Over the past 20 years, we have seen great improvements in the speed and quality of Chinese stakeholder participation in humanitarian relief, and we have also seen more up-to-date approaches and concepts in disaster response operations. In recent years, with the development of science and technology such as the Internet, Amity's humanitarian relief practices have also been upgraded. We embrace new concepts, diversified resources and technological breakthroughs in rescues. We pursue maximized effectiveness for humanitarian relief. In the future, the Amity Foundation expects to join hands with more professional forces to participate in humanitarian relief, to promote the development of humanitarian undertakings, and to serve more needy groups as much as we can.

The "Principal Beggar" and his kindergarten

"Education is like one tree shaking another, one cloud pushing another, one soul calling another."

- Principal Beggar

▲ Wang Longyu

Wang Longyu, born in 1987, is the principal of Desheng Kindergarten in Fucun Town, Fuyuan County.

Fuyuan, is an underdeveloped county, located in Qujing City, Yunnan Province. Its economy depends on flue-cured tobacco, corn and potato. Young people go to big cities to work, leaving their young kids, who should have been cared for by the parents, to the elderly as left-behind children. Due to lack of education resources in the mountainous villages, most kids have not received any preschool education.

Desheng Kindergarten is the best choice for children from local left-behind families. "The School for children from poor families is free of charge; and the fee for ordinary students is the lowest in the whole county," explains Longyu. About 90% of the kids in Desheng Kindergarten are left-behind children. Everything is taken care of by the teachers. Some kids call Wang Longyu "dad", as for them, this man, despite looking somewhat dull, serves as both a teacher and a family member.

This is a kindergarten nestled by big mountains. People in the village rushed out, but Wang Longyu chose to come back.

After graduating from the Normal College, as everyone else did, Wang Longyu got jobs in the city. However, he had a dream of being a teacher in his heart, so after passing the qualification exam, he became a primary school teacher.

▲ Wang Longyu and teachers checking temperature of kids before going to sleep

▲ In 2020, Amity Foundation supported Desheng Kindergarten to build a three-story canteen, which can accommodate more than 100 children to eat in the canteen at the same time

Before, he went to work in a very poor school deep in the mountains. He still remembers the first day he came to the school. The headmaster took a horse to pick him up due to lack of transportation. There was no such thing like water or power supply in the school, but only thatched huts for classrooms. Most of the children in the village dropped out of school early, let alone very few children in the fifth and sixth grades. During the days as a teacher in the primary school, he felt more and more the importance of education for the impoverished children. "Without school, these children will never walk out of the mountains to see the world. This is even more terrible than poverty."

Wang Longyu himself is a child of a difficult village family. When he entered the university, he had no money for university tuition. For the tuition of RMB 3,850, his family borrowed from almost every family of the village. The mountains and children here of the primary school he worked for reminded him of his own experience over and over again. "In my hometown, there are many poor children who were unable to go to school. It makes me feel painful. I must do something," he thought and an idea swirled in his mind: "I want to build a school that helps orphans and children from disabled and poor families." Wang Longyu decided to return to his hometown to do something. With his effort, he hopes, kids in his hometown will be able to go out of the mountains and change destiny.

Taking broken tiles as a treasure, he was named the "Principal Beggar"

"I told my family about the idea of running a school. Unsurprisingly, it was opposed by the whole family." Wang Longyu told us, "they said my family was also in economic difficulty, how could I be able to run a school for poor kids? My friends shook their heads too. They could not understand why I did these things." But Wang Longyu did not give up. By chance, he took over a kindergarten in his hometown, and once again worked for the kids.

Now Wang Yulong had a place. Then he started visiting the left-behind families: in some families, two grandparents were taking care of 14 children, with even lack of food and clothing as urgent problems, some families put the kids in a basket and let a horse carry the kid down to school from the top of the mountain. When Wang Yulong saw and heard that, it made him more committed about his ideas.

▲ Kids going to school themselves in the mountains in 2021

▲ Wang Longyu planting vegetable to increase the kindergarten's income

Through his unremitting efforts, more and more children came to the kindergarten and Wang Longyu's kindergarten started to operate. Out of economic difficulties, Wang Longyu led the other teachers raise pigs, chickens, and plant vegetables during spare time, and then used the income to buy rice and oil for the kindergarten. He repaired the broken desks and chairs himself; he gave kids haircuts himself. He did almost everything himself, just to save money. When his hard work was seen by the villagers, they started to bring rice, potatoes, and cabbage to the kindergarten to help the teachers and children.

desks and chairs were collected from here and there and were shattered. The most advanced equipment was a blackboard that was abandoned by a primary school. "This is not the way to go," Wang Longyu thought and decided to rebuild the campus.

Longyu began to visit people who may be able to help. Later, a kind-hearted villager Nian Yafei joined in. He donated 3.5 acres of his land, "As long as my land is used to build a school or kindergarten for kids, I am willing to donate it free of charge," he said and Wang Longyu saw hope.

He tried his best to obtain the necessary building materials for the school: Xiongguo, secretary of the village committee, organized and coordinated the donation of stone materials by the owner of a stone field, and Zhao Liuxue, deputy secretary of the village committee, provided bricks made by his brick factory. The construction workers took the initiative and worked for low wages when they heard that this is a charity school. A worker with disabilities said: "We have nothing to support. Receiving low wages is what I can do to help the school." Hearing those words, Wang Longyu was moved to tears.

Wang Longyu also visited companies and social organizations to raise materials. In addition, he went together with his school teachers to the waste yard to do "treasure hunt". When they picked up a few ceramic tiles that were dumped by others, they were more than happy. In this way, the "Desheng Kindergarten" was finally completed in the autumn of 2016. The story of Wang Longyu building a school from scratches spread in the village. He was named the "Principal Beggar" by the villagers.

Delivering love with actions, he gave left-behind children a second home

In Wang Longyu's kindergarten, teachers take care of the kids' education as well as during their daily lives. When kids poop in their pants, Wang Longyu will clean everything for them. Kids are easy to be infected with lice in the damp mountainous areas. Wang Longyu regularly cleans the lice up for these kids. The kids, who rarely see their parents working in the cities, are longing for "emotional touch" and Wang Longyu knows that deeply.

In addition to teaching, Wang Longyu regularly carries out home visits to the students' families. This young man, although seldom talks about "love", silently proves his love towards kids by his actions. Wang Longyu said that as long as the children go to school and will be able to work and live outside the mountains, he will be happy.

▲ Wang Longyu carrying out home visits

For the kindergarten, Wang Longyu is still "begging". Thanks to his efforts, more and more people joined in. Slowly, the muddy playground became today's playground with suspended floor. The dilapidated desks and chairs were changed to plastic desks and chairs. The old blackboards were replaced with a projector. The bed on bricks became pretty wooden beds.

"Education is like one tree shaking another, one cloud pushing another, one soul calling another." says Wang Longyu. "I would like to contribute myself to the kids here, on this plateau of Yunnan."

5G Data annotator on the wheelchair

My world becomes bigger when I am able to go out

Guo Rui, born in 1985, has a congenital physical disability on his legs. He is unable to stand or walk. For long, the wheelchair was his closest friend. The steps at the door of his apartment used to cut off his connection with the world.

In 2019, the Disabled Persons' Federation of Qixia District made barrier-free renovations for Guo Rui's home. This makes Guo Rui excited: "It is easier for me to go out! I can better embrace the world and improve my life!"

After "going out", Guo Rui began to participate in different kinds of vocational trainings. "5G AI big data annotation" technology is one of them. This is a technology that provides perception and decision-making solutions for autonomous driving vehicles by marking the outline of cars. Guo Rui, who has a computer background, was very interested in it, and soon became familiar and skilled in the technology. He then became an excellent data annotator, which brought him a stable income.

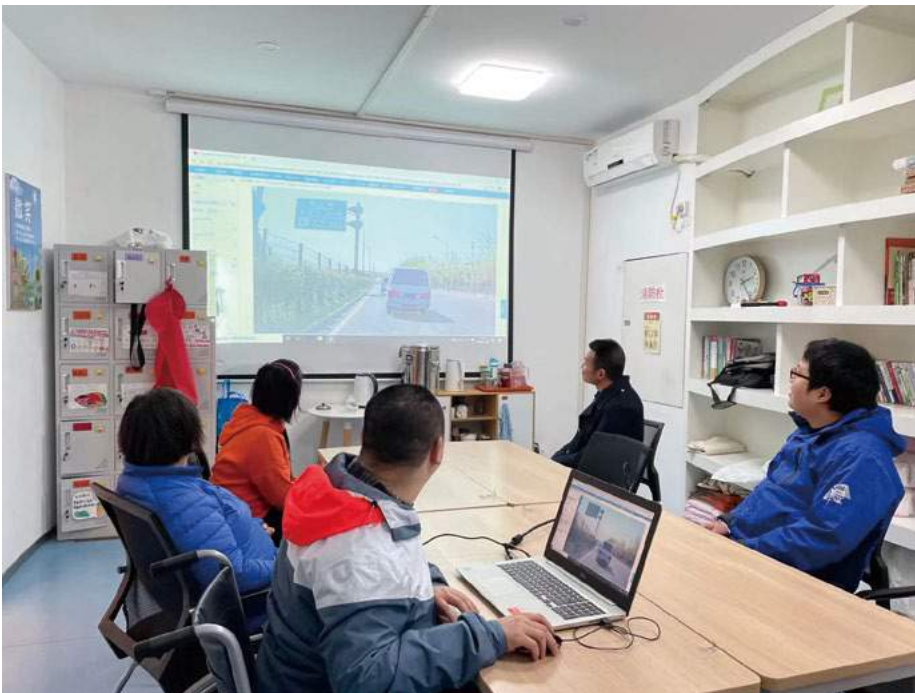

I want them to be like me

Guo Rui makes a lot of friends at the Amity Shanshuiyuan Home for the Challenged under Amity Home of Blessings. Here is a spiritual home for Guo Rui. "My friends and I are disabled people. It is really difficult for us to make a living on ourselves. I am able to rely on my acquired technology skills. So I want to do something for my friends."

After talking to Amity, a special course named "5G AI Big Data Annotation Class" was offered at Shanshuiyuan Home for the Challenged. His friends, of course, became the first students, and there were many others from the surrounding communities. In the eyes of the students, Guo Rui is a great teacher. He patiently helped the students to learn basic computer knowledge. Then he explained and demonstrated the process and techniques of data annotation over and over again, and answered all kinds of questions in details. Moreover, he often discussed with the teachers of the Amity Home for the Challenged about teaching methods and designed some learning tips, bringing in the perspective of the students. With his efforts, everyone's learning became easy and happy, and the students got more confidence in learning computer skills.

"You know what? I have got my 'apprentices' now! They can operate the computer upon themselves to complete the annotation work. I helped them apply for operating accounts already." Guo Rui felt very pleased and a sense of accomplishment.

I want more people to see us

With special skills and "apprentices", Guo Rui got enthusiasm for life. He began to record life with pictures, hoping to tell more people "Life on a wheelchair can also be wonderful!"

Later, he was invited by Qixia District Disabled Persons' Federation to give online classes through live webcast. "Oh it is fun to be an anchor!" said Guo Rui. After the first webcast, he registered an account on a short video platform, and makes friends in Shanshuiyuan on screen. Handicraft classes, sports games, the bits and pieces of his life in this warm and big family were recorded by him and shown on the platform. Moreover, he was more than happy to share video editing skills and experience with his friends.

"If you see Guo Rui sitting in the corner without talking anything, don't worry, he is just making his videos."

"Every time he posts a video, he looks so delighted. We support him and always click 'like' for his videos."

The friends like Guo Rui, this quiet but thoughtful "video expert".

"In the past, everyone helped us. I want to tell everyone that we disabled people can also help others, and we are useful to society!" Guo Rui hopes that his story, pictures and videos will be seen by more people, and recognize their ambition and all their positive energy.

Three late weddings

Traditional Chinese are too shy to articulate their love, especially the elderly people. They may stay together for tens of thousands of days and nights, but lack saying "I love you". On the eve of "5.20", a date for an emerging modern Valentine's Day for young people, the Nanjing Amity Care Home joined hands with Celanese Corporation and organized a collective wedding themed "True Love Lasts Forever" for three old couples.

"I want a traditional Chinese wedding!"

Grandma She had a dream of a Chinese-styled wedding. That day, she put on a traditional Chinese XiuHe suit with her husband in suit. "My mother-in-law liked me and it was her that introduced me to her son!" Grandma She laughed, while recalling the start of the relationship with Grampa Wang. When they got married in 1980, the couple was financially stable, although not rich. So they took a wedding photo as it was emerging and popular among their generation. But the couple did not have a formal wedding. At the 520 wedding at the Amity Care Home, the couple also took a wedding photo in the same pose of the old wedding photo.

Today we are the hero and heroine of our wedding

Grandpa Wu looked radiant, while holding the hand of Grandma Yao. He and his dream girl were walking together on the red carpet. "Oh you are so handsome!" With sweet smiles, Grandma Yao looked into Grandpa Wu's eyes. Grandpa Wu and Grandma Yao were both actors in a drama troupe in their young age. Grandpa Wu was usually the hero and Grandma Yao the heroine. They worked and studied together. With days and nights together, the couple with similar temper and interests fell in love. Recalling of the days they got married, Grandpa Wu felt ashamed. "Due to limited conditions at that time, I could not give her a wedding. The only thing we did was inviting some colleagues, relatives and friends to a meal," said Grandpa Wu, holding his wife's hands. "Today's wedding made up for my regrets. I am so happy we make it!"

◀ Grandpa Wu and Grandma Yao during the wedding

She is a great wife and a great mom

With music playing, Grandpa Ren was slowly pushing Grandma Zhai on a wheelchair onto the stage. Talking about the happiness and the hardness of their love story, Grandpa Ren was moved to tears: "I was very poor when we got married, but she still married me," said Grandpa Ren sadly. "In those years, everything was in shortage. Even food was supplied by tickets. We put everything we had together but could only afford a meal for relatives and friends without a wedding. Then I had to leave her to work in another city for ten years. She lived upon herself and raised our two kids. I know those were difficult years for her but she kept supporting me and encouraging me. She is a great wife and a great mom. I owe her a lot, oh, I really owe her a lot! I will try my best to make up for her the rest of my life."

▲ The wheelchair carries stories, time, and love of the old couple

Time may steal the dark color from their hair, but never the reliance, trust and love of them for each other. Efforts from you, me and from themselves will give them what they want. Please join Amity in supporting Amity Philanthropy Valley Elderly Service!

A special Walk for Amity's Living Water challenge

On March 22 to April 22, the second virtual Amity Walk for Living Water took place. Amity's Walk for Living Water is an annual fundraising walkathon of Amity's Living Water Campaign.

With the funds of the Walk for Living Water, the Amity Foundation has built 30 water and sanitation facilities for villages and schools in Nepal, Myanmar, the Philippines, Sri Lanka and Mainland China.

With the global epidemic raging, the needs for safe drinking water and sanitation in poor areas require extra attention. In the second year of the pandemic the Amity Foundation invited people from all over the world to join our virtual Walk and address this issue.

This is the story of Amity's staunch supporter and friend Debbie from the UK who replied to our call to action. Debbie lived in Hong Kong between 2007-2020 and during that time visited Myanmar on several occasions, teaching English for up to 8 weeks at a time, so she has got to know the local people of the Diocese of Toungoo very well.

When Debbie heard of the good deeds of supporting WASH facilities in Myanmar, she set herself the ambitious target of walking 160km in one month, which she called the 250,000 steps challenge.

Besides giving herself the good purpose to go on a physical and psychological healthy endeavor, and explore the beauty of her local community during the restrictions of the Covid-19 pandemic, Debbie also reached out to her friends.

She not only encouraged and convinced her mum and friends to embark on this meaningful journey and join the challenge but also collected donations for the people in need in Myanmar.

By email, Debbie kept her friends up to date and shared her milestones to rally them on. In the end Debbie accomplished 307,950 steps, 123% of her initial target, which is nearly the distance of walking from Yangon to Toungoo itself!

"When I took on this original target, I really wasn't sure that I would achieve it but knew it would stretch me! It has been great fun exploring my local village (Hatfield Broad Oak) and finding more public footpaths. And naturally, I'm going to try and keep my daily steps up in the future..."

Debbie and her friends raised around £1,500 for Amity's Living Water projects.

Congratulations to Debbie's stunning success and a big "thank you" in the name of the communities in Myanmar whom the funds will benefit!

Ling Chunxiang elected as the first board director of ICVA from China

On May 19th, Ling Chunxiang, General Secretary of the Amity Foundation, was elected as a director of the International Council of Voluntary Agencies (ICVA). She is the first representative from China in the history of the board.

Founded in 1962, ICVA is a global network of NGOs whose mission is to make humanitarian action more principled and effective by working collectively and independently to influence policy and practice. With a diverse network of more than 130 members around the world, ICVA also maintains close cooperation with a number of United Nations agencies and has extensive influence in international humanitarian affairs. In May 2020, Amity Foundation became the first Chinese member of ICVA.

The board of ICVA plays a key governance role for the organization. There are 9 directors in ICVA's governing body, which is elected by the General Assembly. In May 2021, the nomination committee suggested 21 candidates to the General Assembly of ICVA for the new board of directors. Out of the 21 candidates, 9 were elected by more than 130 representatives in ballot. Ling Chunxiang, Secretary General of the Amity Foundation, became one of them.

"As a Chinese social organization that carries out humanitarian and development programs in more than 20 countries and regions, Amity has been working on international humanitarian action and responded to major disasters including the COVID-19 pandemic," said Ling Chunxiang in her introductory speech. "I hope, as a senior management member of a leading NGO in China, my enrollment will bring more diversity and vigor to ICVA's new board and to the development of global humanitarian work."

Board of Directors meeting discusses Amity's future work

On April 29, the 10th meeting of the Amity Foundation's third board of directors was held in Nanjing. More than 20 leaders, consultants, directors, supervisors and senior Amity staff attended the meeting. Chair of the Board, Mr Qiu Zhonghui presided over the meeting.

General-Secretary Ling Chunxiang pointed out in her 2020 work report the overall good results of Amity's fundraising work despite the difficulties of the Covid-19 pandemic. Online fundraising and corporate funding continued to increase and Amity ranked 8th among all public fundraising organizations during the 99 Giving Days. Moreover, Amity won several public and private awards over the last year, including the title "National Charity Model".

For the 2021 planning, General Secretary Ling Chunxiang pointed out future work areas aligned with China's national strategy, which includes rural revitalization, social governance, internationalization, industrial ecological construction, and strengthening Amity's institutional capacity.

Board directors draw attention to new opportunities for integrated development in the Yangtse River Delta region, which covers the three provinces of Jiangsu, Anhui, and Zhejiang as well as the city of Shanghai and to contribute to the integrated development of philanthropy in the region.

In current complex and fast changing local and international environments, the Board of Directors, encouraged Amity to play to its traditional strengths and continue working on rural revitalization, elderly care and to promote internationalization.

The directors gave high recognition to the achievement by Amity in 2020. Looking forward to the new year, Amity should combine solidarity and innovation, find a good balance between "fast" and "stable", and keep on the scientific and pragmatic work methods.

Amity launches Charity Calligraphy and Painting Institute

The Amity Foundation has founded the Amity Charity Calligraphy and Painting Institute. On 28 May, Amity celebrated the opening of an art and charity institute with an unveiling ceremony and its first painting and calligraphy exhibition in Nanjing. The event was attended by various nation-wide well-known artists and provincial officials. The calligraphy and painting exhibition also displayed paintings from children from Amity project areas. During the event, a new special fund between Amity and Zhu Yaokui, a famous Chinese artist, was established. The fund aims to promote cultural development and education in mountainous regions of China.

Mr. Qiu Zhonghui, Chair of the Board of the Amity Foundation, said that the Institute will connect artists and art communities with charity. Through artists exchanges, art trainings and charity auctions, the Institute will combine traditional Chinese culture with charity.

▲ Zhu Yaokui and other artists are visiting the art exhibition

At present, the Amity Charity Calligraphy and Painting Institute has calligraphers and painters from nine Chinese provinces. In the future, the Institute hopes to attract more artists from all over the country, organize overseas non-governmental exchanges and further promote Chinese traditional art and combine it with Amity's social development projects.

Amity holds training on Child Welfare

To strengthen project management capabilities of children's development work in China, Amity Foundation organized a 3-days workshop end of May with 28 partner organizations from 8 provinces and cities across the country. Amity organized the event within the framework of Amity's orphans fostering program. Over the last 19 years, Amity's orphan program supported funding for more than 46,000 orphans. China has just implemented new amendments to its Law on the Protection of Minors and the Law on the Prevention of Juvenile Delinquency to further improve children's rights in China.

New Amity Bakery store opens in Kunshan

On June 3, a new Amity Bakery store, located on Huanghe Road, opened in the city of Kunshan. Amity's Board Chair Qiu Zhonghui, General Secretary Ling Chunxiang, and representatives from district government and Amity's local partners attended the opening ceremony.

Now, Amity Bakery has six stores in total, located in Nanjing, Wuxi and Kunshan.

Since 2018, Kunshan Amity Bakery has got 13 formal employees, and has supported a total of 17 mentally challenged young people for vocational trainings. At present, 5 regular trainees are trained at Kunshan Amity Bakery. They have been learning skills of making sandwiches and cookies, kneading dough, baking eggs, ham, and packaging products. Their training and daily life in the bakery has also made these young people more cheerful. They are now willing to interact with others, a great progress and gain for people with learning difficulties.

Amity and CSR partner support rural hygiene with WASH project

On April 20, the Amity Foundation and its Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) partner tesa celebrated the construction of new sanitation facilities for Maipo Village Primary School. Funded by tesa Greater China, the Amity Foundation replaced the old sanitation facilities of the primary school, which lacked modern and healthy hygienic standards. The newly built sanitation building will support 373 primary students in providing sufficient daily hygiene.

◀ The old toilets and washing facilities (on the left) were replaced with modern toilets and hand basins (on the right) that ensure hygienic modern standards

The ceremony was attended by local officials, Amity representatives and volunteers of tesa enterprise. In order to support the development of good hygiene habits, the volunteers gave training sessions at the school and reminded the kids about the importance of personal hygiene habits and awareness.

Amity's rural WASH program has rebuilt or renovated more than 800 environmentally friendly school sanitation facilities in rural and remote areas of China over the last decades. The program that mainly supports rural schools in Ningxia, Gansu, and Shanxi province aligns with the national Green Education initiative, of the year 2019. The initiative aims to enhance the environmental awareness of the next generation.

Amity's program enhances general health awareness and education among children in rural areas and rebuilds and renovates sanitation facilities, which include modern toilets, hand basins, toilets, and septic tanks.
